OK, last night I upgraded to BlogCFC 5.9, which Ray released the other day. Pretty heavy update, with over 30 file changes in the readme, but very smooth when using WinMerge (thanks to Mark Drew for that little tip).

One item of interest, though. Ray mentions in the readme that he's stopped logging the changes in the document headers, stating that it's redundant to place them there and within the readme doc. He also states "I decided I'd skip that since BlogCFC 6 will have new files." I also noticed, while reviewing the changes, that he has code in place for checking the server version. CF 8 specific changes on the way? We'll have to wait and see.
